| IV. Employment | 03/2006 - now | -Name: Food Safety Authority of Ireland | Food Safety/risk assessment of chemicals in food, including food additives, contaminants in food, food contact materials and novel foods. FSAI also acts as competent authority for receipt of applications for plastics recycling processes, for forwarding to EFSA. My role as consultant on contract to FSAI is to undertake specific projects as required, including drafting of guidance material on additives, contaminants and flavourings in food, management of a breast milk study in Ireland and toxicological advice on chemicals of particular concern in food, including food additives, contaminants and food contact materials. I also advise FSAI on toxicological aspects of novel food dossiers submitted to FSAI. There is no conflict of interest between this work and my normal EFSA duties, as assessment of these dossiers under the Novel Food Regulation is a matter of national regulation and is decided by the EU competent authorities at meetings in Brussels. A proportion of the dossiers are referred to EFSA for opinion, but are then considered by the NDA Panel. I have no involvement in the work of the NDA Panel |

This technical support finished as of March, 2012. (1) Chemical substances. January 2011 - December 2011 To Note: None of the work described above, carried out as a technical/scientific associate of Milieu Ltd, Belgium, has involved assessment of Bisphenol A or other individual substances for any other organisation or DG of the Commission. The work has not involved risk assessment of individual substances, with the exception of work described above on Annex IV of REACH, and Bisphenol A is not included in this Annex. However it should be noted that Bisphenol A is included as a case study in the report on application of the Precautionary Principle by the European Commission in (5) above. The report however did not involve assessment of Bisphenol A and does not make any recommendations in relation to this or other chemicals. It seeks to establish general criteria for application of the precautionary principle for use by the European Commission. |

Also acted as reviewer of the case studies selected by the Expert Group on Margin of Exposure for the subsequent publication in Food and Chemical Toxicology 48 (2010) S2–S24. It should be noted that the EFSA opinion on the MoE had already been adopted and therefore the workshop could not influence EFSA views. Also the workshop was open to any participant and all the information is publicly available through the scientific publication. Additionally participation in such open scientific events (whether organised by private or public organisations) is a normal activity of scientists world wide. |
